

Impact through Scholar – Activism

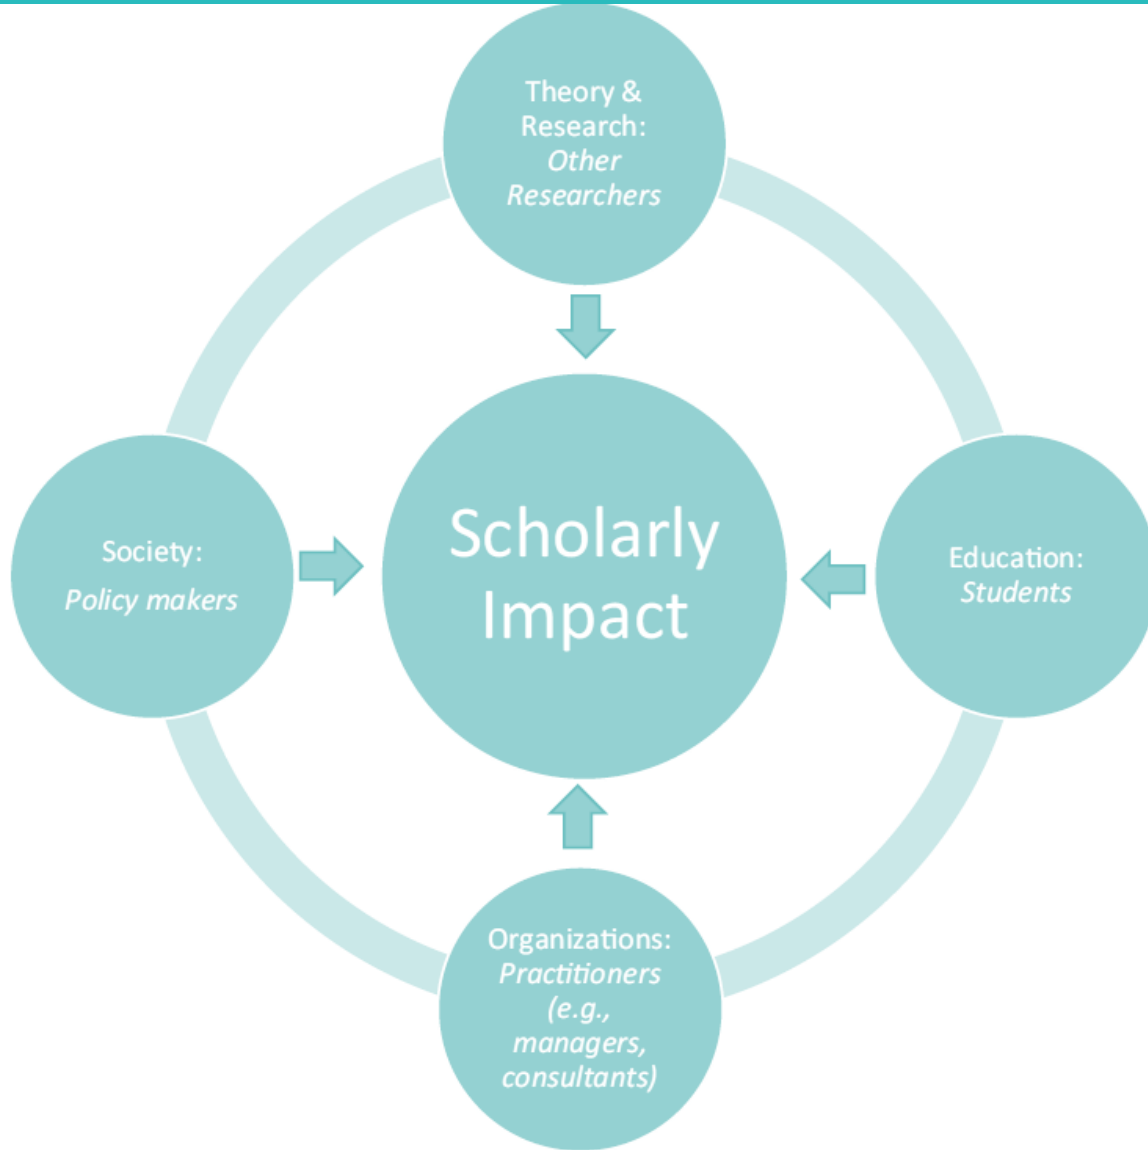

The New Frontier of Value-Creating Research

Charlotte M. Karam, PhD

Impact

ENHANCING SCHOLARLY IMPACT

1. Align scholarly impact goals with actions and resource allocation decisions.
2. Ensure that performance management and reward systems are consistent with impact goals
3. Be strategic in selecting a journal list.
4. Develop a strong doctoral program (with practice components).
5. Promote practical knowledge and applications

(Aguinis, Yu, & Tosun. 2021)

VALUE FOR WHOM?

- Who do the researchers claim the findings benefit?
- What are the actual benefits and for whom?
- What, if any, inequities or injustices are augmented or challenged?

Impact you strive for in your research is about:

- changing systems that exclude, oppress, exploit
- bringing about political or social change
- working to redress the big problems of the world, of our communities

Scholar-Activist

Scholar-Activist

“...in active participation in practical life, as constructor [and] organizer, a permanent persuader, and not just simple orator. “

- Gramsci (1971)

Scholar-Activist

“talk-plus-walk”

- Tilley and Taylor (2014)

- The transformation of social relations
- The quest for justice through reducing inequality by advancing the diverse interests of individuals and communities
- The striving for equity through structural change in the context of global capitalism

THE
F-word

My Journey to Feminist Research

From Positivism to Whatever Empowers Change

01

New PhD | Publish or Perish

02

Unpacking my own struggle in the Academy

03

Broaden to include alternative epistemologies

04

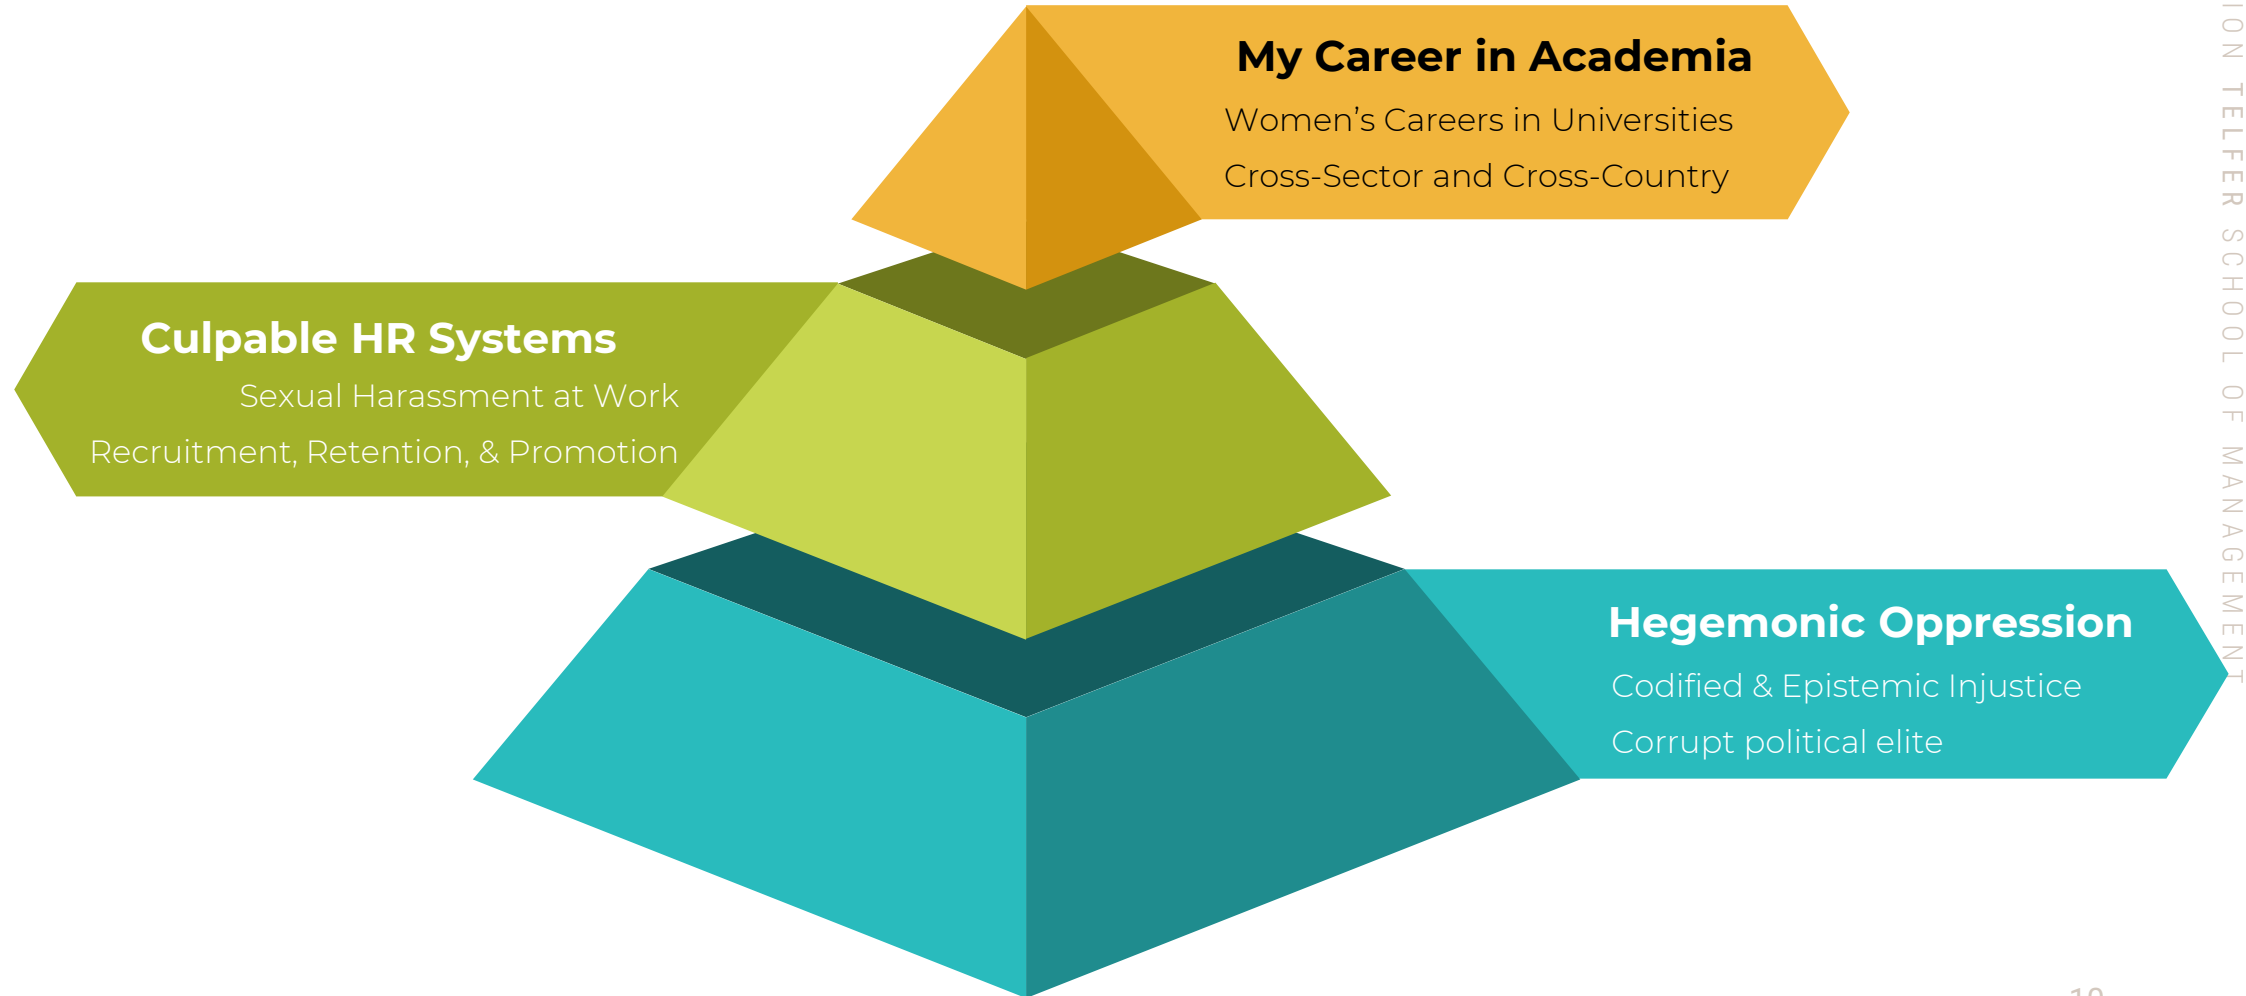

Scholar-activist & Activist-Scholar

Possibilities for evidence-based, local,
participatory change

Scholar-Activist & Activist-Scholar

Possibilities for evidence-based, local, participatory change

My Career in Academia

Women's Careers in Universities
Cross-Sector and Cross-Country

The International Journal of Human Resource Management, 2013
http://dx.doi.org/10.1080/09585192.2013.792857

Localizing women's experiences in academia: multilevel factors at play in the Arab Middle East and North Africa

Charlotte M. Karam* and Fida Afouni

Olayan School of Business, American University of Beirut, Beirut, Lebanon

This article explores the localized experiences of women at work in higher education in the under-researched context of the Arab Middle East and North Africa. Our main research questions are: What is the current status of academic women between and across the countries of this region? How can human resources play a developmental role for women at work in academic institutions, as well as for the region in general? We adopt a two-part research method in this study. First, through a critical review of the literature, we develop a regionally relevant macrolevel hypothetical model to localize a gender perspective on women at work. Second, we engage in a focused empirical examination of publicly available university data to document the: (1) representation of women across ranks; and (2) specific content of pertinent human resource policies. On the basis of these data, we propose a more complete multilevel hypothetical model upon which we put forward a critical discussion and directions for future research on gender, human resource management and regional development more broadly.

Keywords: academia; Arab Middle East and North Africa; development; gender; human resources; Islamic family-friendly policies; universities

Introduction

The current status of academic women has been a topic of interest for researchers for over four decades. Early studies documenting the experiences of these women were undertaken by Lewin and Duchan (1971), Widom and Burke (1978) and Brown and Smith (1989). Since then, many authors have explored the status of women in academia, namely, in the UK and other western countries (Bailyn 2003; Benschop and Brouns 2003; Probert 2005; Moss and Pryke 2007; Knights and Kerfoot 2008; Roos and Gatta 2009; Byers and Crocker 2012). Although no recent comprehensive review could be found, a number of books on this subject in the last decade are available (DiGeorgio-Lutz 2002; Li and Beckett 2006; Stewart, Malley and LaVaque-Manty 2007; Berger and Guidroz 2010). These efforts have centered mainly within the western academic context. While the frustrations, challenges and success of women in many western universities (e.g. USA, Canada, UK) are being charted on an ongoing basis, similar data about the current status of academic women in the developing world are less available in published academic literature. There are some exceptions in the last 15 years including studies focused on the nations of the commonwealth and sub-Saharan Africa (e.g. Naidoo 1998; Musisi 2003; Cloete, Pillay, Badat and Moja 2004; Moultrie and de la Rey 2004; Kwesiga and Ssendiwalwa 2006; Morley et al. 2006; Morley 2007), but little is known about the status of academic women in other parts of the developing world.

*Corresponding author. Email: ck16@aub.edu.lb

The current issue and full text archive of this journal is available at www.emeraldinsight.com/1362-0436.htm

DOI
19,5

548

Received 15 January 2013
Revised 31 October 2013
1 March 2014
2 April 2014
4 May 2014
Accepted 20 May 2014

Structure, agency, and notions of career success

A process-oriented, subjectively malleable and localized approach

Fida Afouni and Charlotte M. Karam

Olayan School of Business, American University of Beirut, Beirut, Lebanon

Abstract

Purpose – The purpose of this paper is to explore notions of career success from a process-oriented perspective. The authors argue that success can be usefully conceptualized as a subjectively malleable and localized construct that is continually (re)interpreted and (re)shaped through the interaction between individual agency and macro-level structures.

Design/methodology/approach – The paper employs a qualitative methodology drawing on 32 in-depth semi-structured interviews with female academics from eight countries in the Arab Middle East. Findings – Findings of this study provide an empirical validation of the suggested Career Success Framework and moves toward an integrative model of objective and subjective career success criteria. More specifically, the findings showed that women's definitions of success are: first, localized in that they capture considerations relating to predominant institutions in the region (i.e. family and gender ideology); second, subjectively malleable in that they capture women's agency embedded in specific macro-level structures; and finally, process oriented in that they reflect a dynamic interaction between the structure agency as well as the subsequent actions, strategies, and behaviors women adopt to alleviate tension and reach their personal notions of career success.

Practical implications – The authors suggest that there may be value in customizing human resource management policies in the region around the salience of family and community service. Moreover, organizations can play a pivotal role in supporting women to work through the experienced tensions. Examples of such support are mentoring programs, championing female role models, and designing corporate social responsibility initiatives geared toward shifting mandated gender structures in the region. Finally, the authors argue that organizations could benefit by supporting women's atypical patterns of career engagement to allow for interactions with wider circles of stakeholders such as the community. This requires organizations to rethink their career success criteria to allow for the integration of non-traditional elements of career.

Social implications – Adopting a more process-oriented view of career success avoids reification by drawing attention to local macro-level structures as well as individual agency. It also suggests that existing norms for how "success" is understood are only one element in a wider process of what it means to be "successful", thereby opening space for more diverse and localized conceptualizations.

Originality/value – This paper provides a more process-oriented consideration of career success, highlighting the importance of understanding how perceived tensions shape an individual's behaviors, actions, and career strategies. The value of this contribution is that it allows us to better understand the complex interaction of structure and agency in shaping an individual's notions of career success.

Keywords: Higher education; Gender; Qualitative research; Career success; Family; Cross-cultural management; Structuration theory; Academic careers; Arab Middle East; Career theory; Structure agency

Paper type: Research paper

Journal Development International
Vol. 30 No. 5, 2014
p. 548-571
© Emerald Group Publishing Limited
1362-0436
DOI: 10.1108/IJHRM-01-2013-0007

The authors would like to thank the University Research Board (DDF-118010-288805) at the American University of Beirut for funding this research project. The authors would also like to thank the two anonymous reviewers and the Associate Editor Professor Julia Richardson for their constructive feedback and comments.

Received: 31 October 2018 | Revised: 14 November 2020 | Accepted: 30 November 2020

DOI: 10.1111/jwao.12607

ORIGINAL ARTICLE

WILEY

Career constructions and a feminist standpoint on the meaning of context

Charlotte M. Karam | Fida Afouni

Management, Marketing and Entrepreneurship Track, Olayan School of Business, American University of Beirut, Beirut, Lebanon

Correspondence

Charlotte M. Karam, Olayan School of Business, American University of Beirut, Bliss St., PO Box 11-0236, Riad El Solh, Beirut 1102 2020, Lebanon.
Email: ck16@aub.edu.lb

Funding Information

American University of Beirut's University Research Board, Grant/Award Numbers: 103005, 22683

Abstract

This paper explores how context shapes the career constructions of 40 Lebanese female professionals. Starting with career construction theory (CCT), we leverage feminist standpoint theory (FST) to propose a hybrid analytic framework. With this framework, we invite CCT researchers to theorize career constructions as situated. The situatedness of career constructions calls for the exploration of an individual's career choices, coupled with the simultaneous potential constraints on choice emanating from collective experiences of historical and sociopolitical oppression. Theorizing contextual complexities in this way leads to a more nuanced tracing of how the personal experiences of challenge, and for some, the oppressive aspects of collective histories are selectively used to construct a cohesive sense of career storied self, each with distinctive implications for the domains of CCT—Vocational Personality (the what), Career Adaptability (the how), and Life Theme (the why). Our analysis reveals three key patterns: (1) advancing the professional field (vocational expert), (2) seeking self-vindication (adaptive rebel), and (3) engaging in activism (sympathetic activist vs. epistemically privileged activist). We conclude by discussing the value of our framework, thereby highlighting how acknowledging situatedness helps to inform our understandings of career patterns and of the "politicization" of career trajectories.

KEYWORDS

career construction theory, careers, context, feminist standpoint, Middle East, oppression, qualitative analysis, situatedness

Hegemonic Oppression

Codified & Epistemic Injustice

Corrupt political elite

Journal of Business Ethics (2023) 187:645–655
https://doi.org/10.1007/s10551-023-05462-5

ORIGINAL PAPER

Intimate Partner Violence and Business: Exploring the Role of Ethical Enquiry

Charlotte M. Karam^{1,2} · Michelle Greenwood³ · Laura Kauzlarich⁴ · Anne O'Leary-Kelly⁵

Received: 23 January 2023 / Accepted: 24 May 2023 / Published online: 26 June 2023
© The Author(s) 2023

Abstract

In this article, we conceptualize the under investigated and under theorized relationship between intimate partner violence (IPV) and business responsibility. As an urgent social issue, IPV—understood as a pattern of behavior in an intimate partner relationship, mainly perpetrated by men and involving a pattern of power and control—is a complex phenomenon that has been studied in many disciplines. A less common yet vital research perspective is to examine how organizations should engage with IPV. In response to this question, we explore the intersections in the business responsibility scholarship: the assumed role of the organization's responsibility to the broader socio-political-economic environment; and the socializing ethics (justice/fairness; ethics of care). Thus, we explicate four approaches to serve the purposes of mapping three selected contributions, identifying limitations, and future research opportunities.

Keywords Intimate partner violence · IPV · Domestic violence · Business responsibility

Introduction

Intimate partner violence against women aged 18 and over has been a global public health concern for decades. It involves a pattern of behavior in an intimate partner relationship, mainly perpetrated by men and involving a pattern of power and control. It has been studied in many disciplines, and it has been found to have a significant impact on the health and well-being of women. As sociology, psychology, and political science have coupled with the study of IPV, the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic demonstrates the need for a holistic approach to understanding this phenomenon as a complex system (Sardar, 2020). This research perspective (OLK, 2020) focuses on uncovering the intersections in the business responsibility scholarship (people, experiences, processes, outcomes), and Editors at the Journal of Business Ethics are blinded from decisions on manuscripts on which they are listed as authors. Such manuscripts are handled by an independent editor at the journal and subject to peer review processes.

✉ Michelle Greenwood
michelle.greenwood@monash.edu
Charlotte M. Karam
Charlotte.Karam@uottawa.ca
Laura Kauzlarich
lkauzlarich@nwmissouri.edu
Anne O'Leary-Kelly
AOLeary-Kelly@walton.uark.edu
Tracy Wilcox
twilcox@unsw.edu.au

- ¹ University of Ottawa, Ottawa, Canada
- ² American University of Beirut, Beirut, Lebanon
- ³ Monash University, Melbourne, Australia
- ⁴ Northwest Missouri State University, Maryville, USA
- ⁵ University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, USA
- ⁶ University of New South Wales, Sydney, Australia

various kinds, localized violence, persecution, and poverty—have long been and in Response on, and duction to the University of Beirut, Lebanon

focus on ways to better understand the role of organizations, and institutional change in response to disruption, division, and we provide important insights into the hardships and heartache of displacement; in addition, they provide glimpses into potential future research; we develop a framework building on extant literature that understands the consequences of eroding, or inadequate, systems when the status quo is destroyed, and what such novel and analysis. We offer a temporal view of responses to disruption, the papers in this Special Issue to identify and explain potential points in time. To conclude, we provide a short summary of each

Organization Studies
2022, Vol. 43(10) 1535–1557
© The Author(s) 2022
Article reuse guidelines:
sagepub.com/journals-permissions
DOI: 10.1177/01708406221122237
www.egosnet.org/os
SAGE

Trish Reay, University of Alberta, 4-24A Business Bldg., Edmonton, AB T6G 2R6, Canada.
Email: trish.reay@ualberta.ca

Hegemonic Oppression

Codified & Epistemic Injustice

Corrupt political elite

Culpable HR Systems

Sexual Harassment at Work
Recruitment, Retention, & Promotion

- Aim: Examine how employers and their key stakeholders understand Sexual Harassment and how they engage in anti-SH efforts
- Definition of SH adopted: Unwanted, unwelcomed behavior of a sexual or sex-based nature that can manifest in different forms (e.g., verbal, physical, psychological) and across different mediums (e.g., cyberspace, in person, through images, etc.)
- Participants: employers and stakeholders that are embedded within the Lebanese National Business System (NBS).

The current issue and full text archive of this journal is available on Emerald Insight at:
www.emeraldinsight.com/2040-7149.htm

Multilevel power dynamics shaping employer anti-sexual harassment efforts in Lebanon

Charlotte Karam and May Ghanem
*Suliman S. Olayan School of Business,
American University of Beirut, Beirut, Lebanon*

Employer anti-sexual harassment efforts

Received 1 April 2019
Revised 4 August 2019
Accepted 10 September 2019

Abstract
Purpose – The #MeToo movement against sexual harassment (SH) has sparked a sense of familiarity, and collective anger among women, highlighting it as a pervasive and common experience across the globe. The purpose of this paper is to argue that despite shared experiences and such transnational movements, the ways in which SH is actually understood and combated are likely to be different in disparate National Business Systems (NBS). Through the analysis, the authors unpack these differences by paying specific attention to the multilevel power dynamics shaping how employers and their key stakeholders understand and respond to SH in Lebanon.
Design/methodology/approach – Against the backdrop of the complex and inefficient Lebanese NBS, the authors adopt a cross-cultural feminist analytic framework and engage in an iterative qualitative analysis of over 200 pages of transcripts from relevant multilevel, multi-stakeholder interactive sessions. Based on the analysis, the authors propose a series of first- and second-order concepts and themes that help to trace how power shapes local SH understandings and related efforts.
Findings – The findings highlight the simultaneous influence of power through geopolitical forces external to Lebanon (e.g. power over through North-centrism and othering; power to through comparative perspectives and SHG regulations), combined with local forces embedded within the specific NBS (e.g. power over through negative attitudes and NBS specificities; power to through positive business efforts and local multistakeholder mobilizing).
Originality/value – The findings demonstrate the importance of paying attention to the interaction between power, contextual embeddedness and geopolitical considerations in attempts to advance SH theorization.
Keywords Lebanon, Sexual harassment, Power, #MeToo, National Business System, Power dynamics
Paper type Research paper

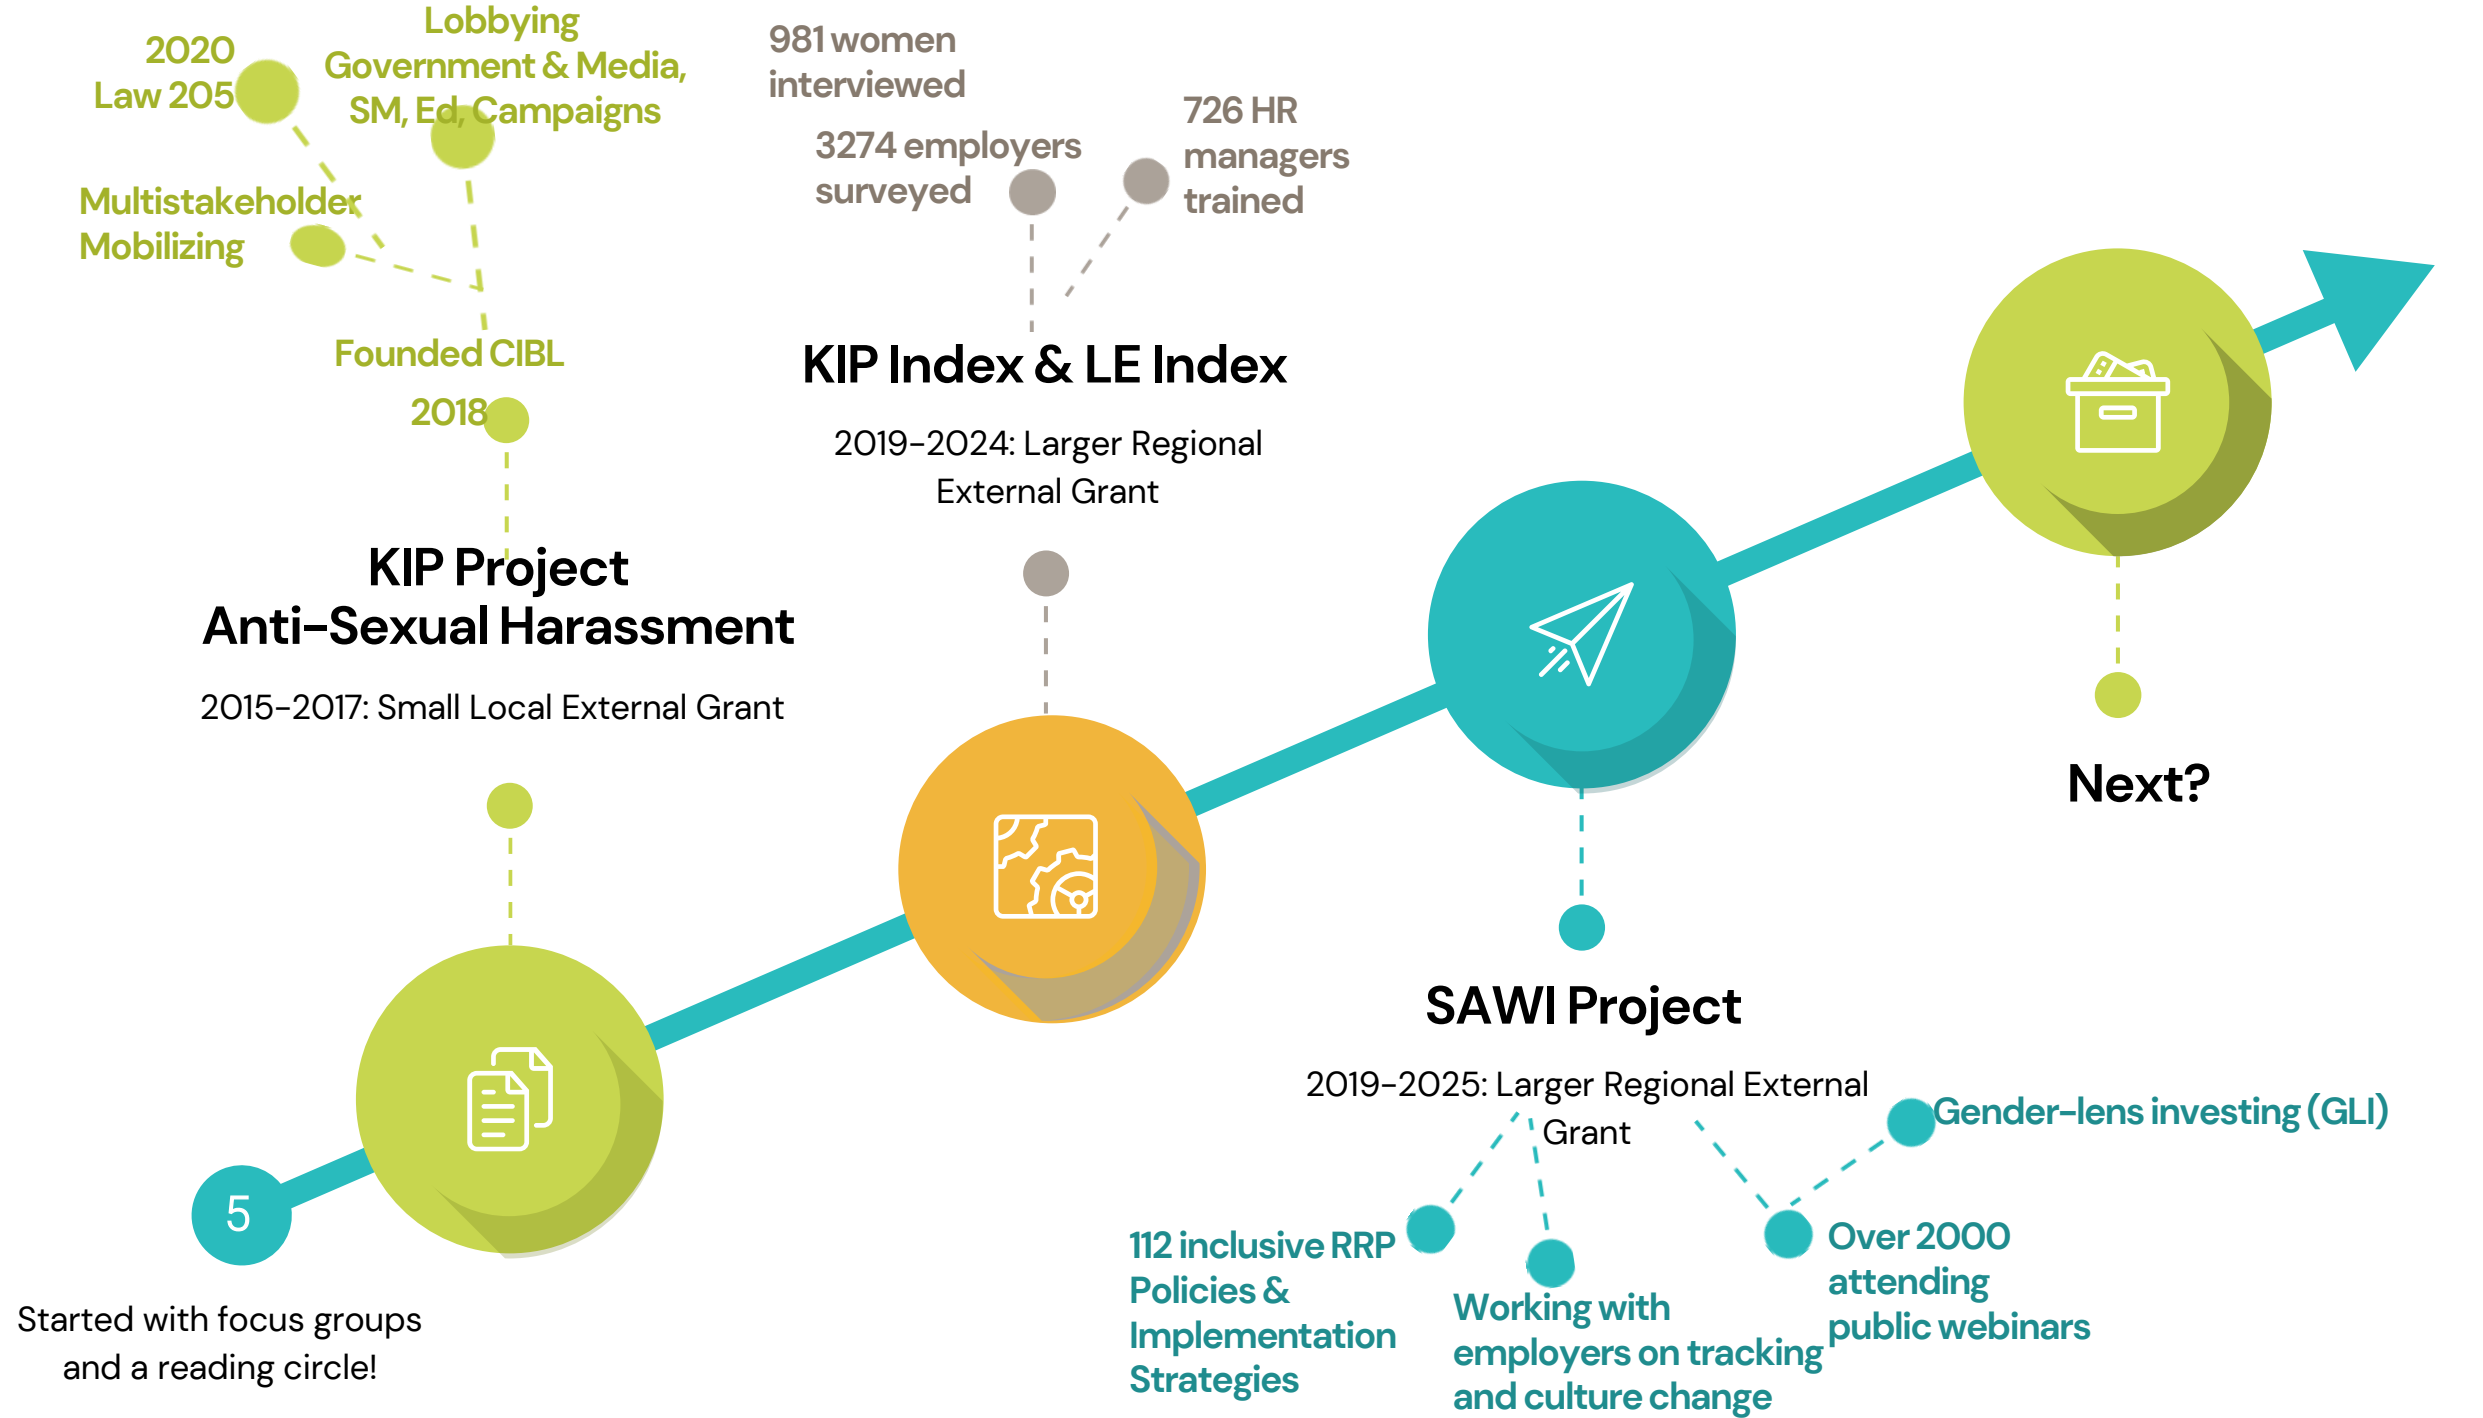

Introduction
With global attention currently afforded to the #MeToo movement, we see millions of women emboldened to speak out against systemic, widespread forms of sexual harassment (SH) (Khorrami, 2017). From the studios of Hollywood, the offices of Hong Kong and Lahore, and the showrooms of Addis Ababa and Gaza, women are responding to the latter movement with localized expressions of similar hashtags: #أناأنا, #Ik Ook, #Kai Ago and #я тоже (Lichtenstein, 2017; Schneider and Carpenter, 2019). These are examples of the latest iteration of activities protesting against SH. In the Arab world, we see related momentum building with protests calling for change through sit-ins, street gatherings, #feminisms and cyberfeminism (e.g. #Ana Kama, أنا أنا). Motivated by sentiments of frustration, solidarity and transnational feminist praxis (Stephan, 2013), these most recent efforts add to the numerous pre-existing local efforts to raise awareness (e.g. #NotYourAshta, #MeshKasita, #ModestyDoesn'tStopHarassment and #MosqueMeToo).
Even with these and other forms of resistance condemning SH in the region (Salameh, 2014), the actual protections, interventions and remedial avenues available to employees are rare and/or ineffective (Hejase, 2015; ILO, 2018; Melki and Mallat, 2016). Of the 22 Arab

This research was made possible through a research grant awarded by the American University of Beirut's University Research Board to the first author (Award No. 103370; Project No. 23904). The first author would also like to acknowledge the generous support of the Arab Fund Fellowship Program for their generous sabbatical support during which the paper was written.

Equity, Diversity and Inclusion:
An International Journal
© Emerald Publishing Limited
1040-7149
DOI: 10.1108/EJID-06-2019-0119

What are the power dynamics shaping the understanding of SH in Lebanese workplaces?

- There are intricate power dynamics both within and outside Lebanon's national context
- The way SH is understood is intimately embedded in the context in which the event happens and therefore is tied to larger systems in a nation i.e. the political, colonial, financial, cultural, etc...
- Power is highlighted as forces beyond the individual and interpersonal levels of analyses, to bring to light power dynamics intimately intertwined with intranational subsystem intricacies and historical transnational geopolitical forces

2020 Law 205
 Lobbying Government & Media, SM, Ed, Campaigns
 Multistakeholder Mobilizing
 Founded CIBL
 2018

981 women interviewed
 3274 employers surveyed
 726 HR managers trained

KIP Index & LE Index

2019-2024: Larger Regional External Grant

KIP Project Anti-Sexual Harassment

2015-2017: Small Local External Grant

Next?

SAWI Project

2019-2025: Larger Regional External Grant

Gender-lens investing (GLI)

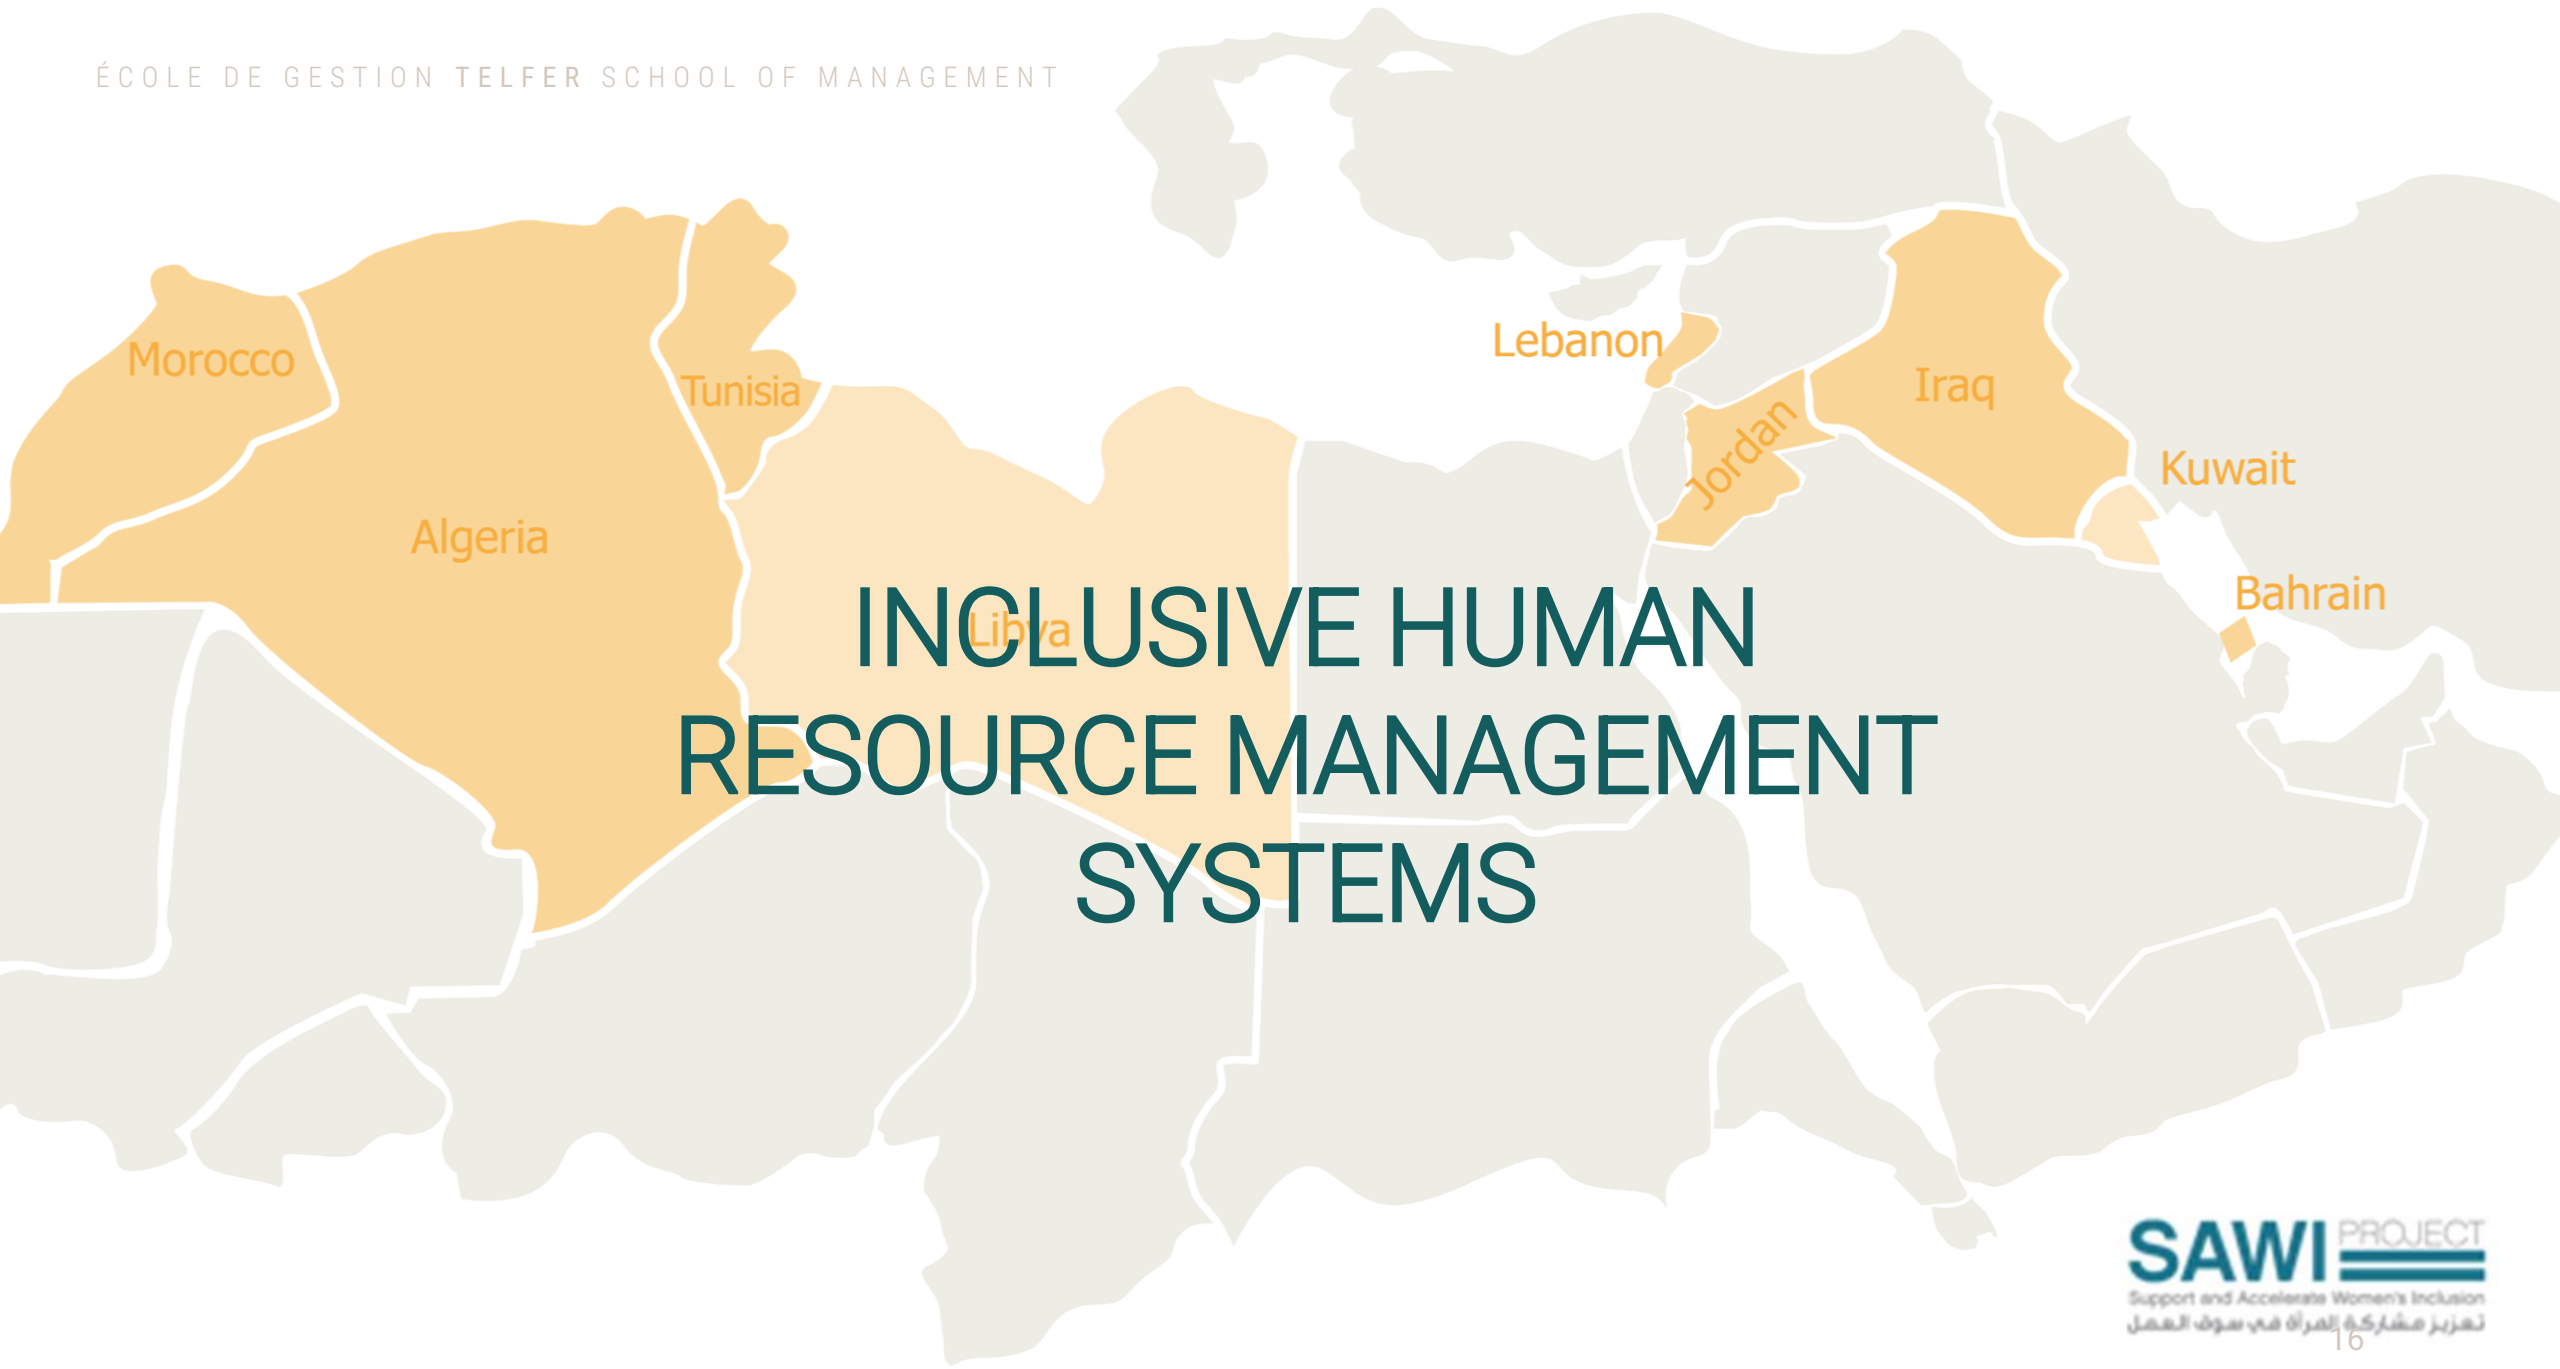

112 inclusive RRP Policies & Implementation Strategies

Working with employers on tracking and culture change

Over 2000 attending public webinars

Started with focus groups and a reading circle!

5

INCLUSIVE HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS

Feminism(s)

HOW CAN THEY
INFORM YOUR RESEARCH IN MANAGEMENT?

WHAT ARE RELEVANT
APPROACHES IN MANAGEMENT RESEARCH?

Feminism(s)

Liberal

- Neoliberal economy
- Business case for inclusion
- Increased role of private sector
- Managing diversity through training, flex time, internal productivity focus
- Bottom line remains priority

Liberating

- Centralize power and power dynamics to examine HR structures, management-employee, positionality
- The dynamics of oppression underpinning gender, global markets, capitalist relations, and the ideologies that advance the current political economy
- Who benefits and who losses
- Combat the processes that exploit, marginalize, and colonize

MANAGERIAL

focused on inclusive HR systems as it relates to business outcomes and how to ensure competitive advantage through inclusion (DEII) efforts.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

focused on inclusive HR systems as it relates to inequality and injustice, and how to achieve a fair and equitable workplace through inclusion (DEII) efforts.

CRITICAL

focused on inclusive systems and structures of discursive power normalizing the actions of dominant and subordinate groups and how to achieve emancipation.

Liberal

Liberating

3. Critical Feminist Perspective

Liberating Feminisms

Moving outside of the fishbowl to look at the negative externalities of business, HR practices and neoliberal market system

political economies

market economics

geopolitics

colonization

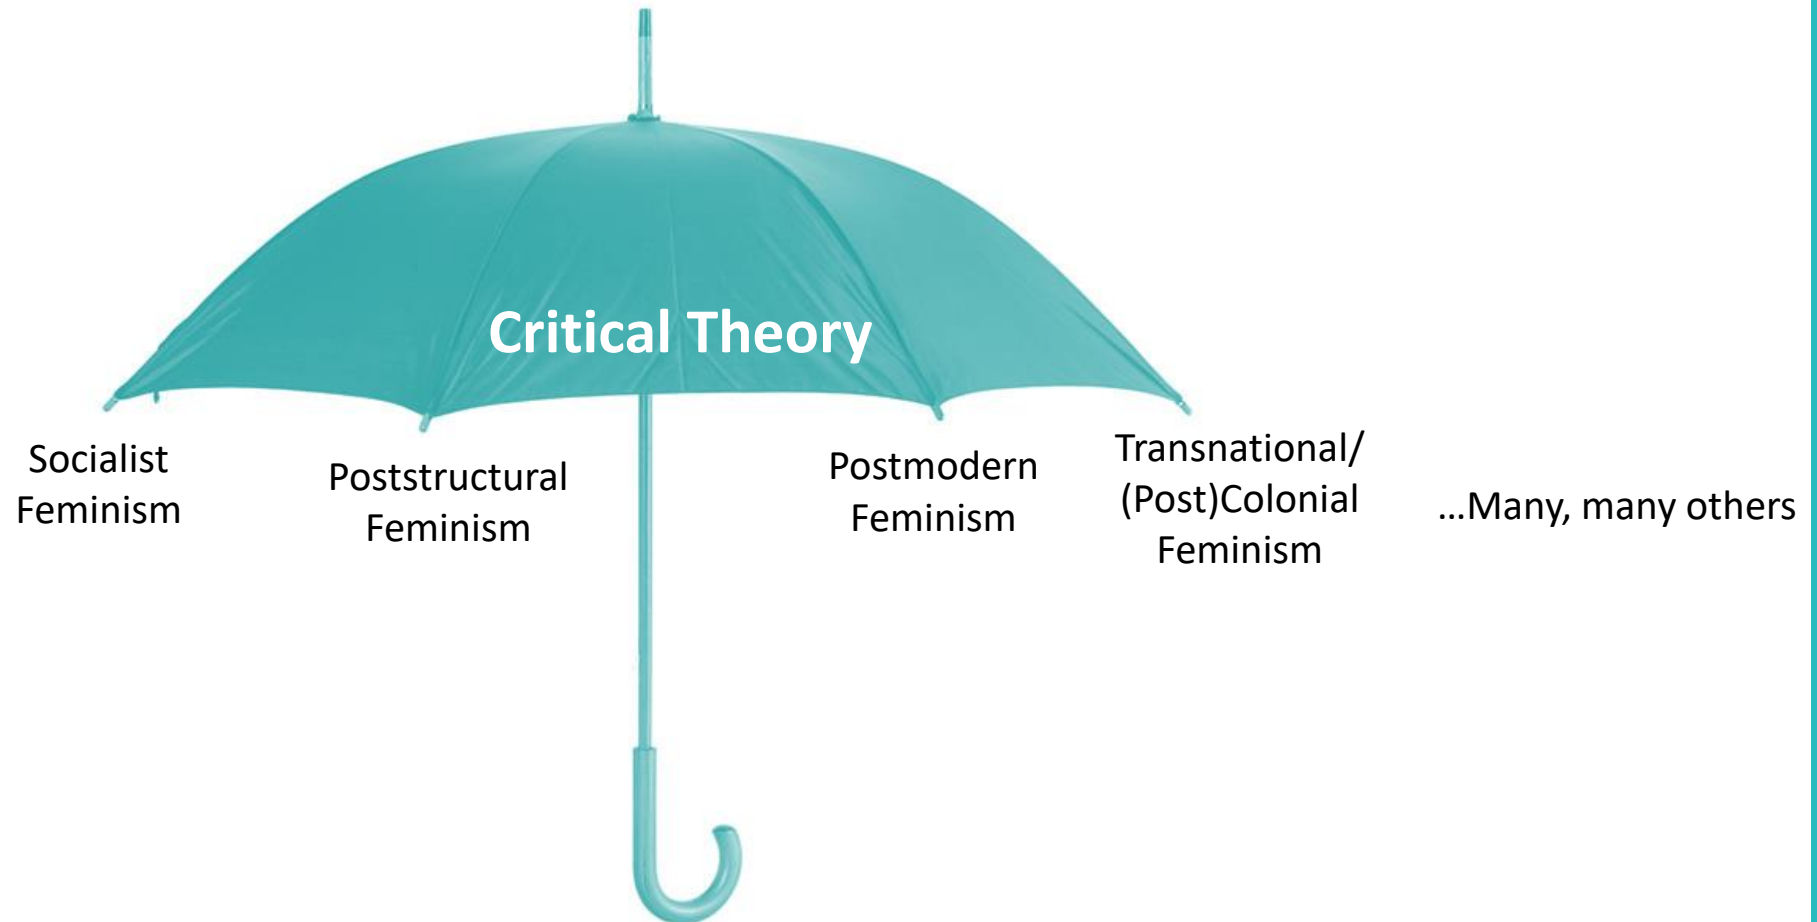

cultural imperialism

global labor markets

3. Critical Feminist Perspective

Liberating Feminisms

Different Critical Feminism(s)

Something's Gotta Change

TOM GAULD

Something's Gotta Change

Career progression in the academy today is contingent on top tier academic publications as the most sought-after indicator of academic success

While these types of academic outputs are extremely important and necessary, scholars' societal impact that takes shape in forms other than top-tier journal publications has not found its position into academic reward systems.

Something's Gotta Change

Capturing scholarly "impact" often relies on familiar suspects like h index, JIF, and citations, despite evidence that these indicators are narrow, often misleading, and generally insufficient to capture the full richness of scholarly work. Considering a wider breadth of contributions in assessing the value of academic activities may require a new mental model.

