

CANADIAN SECURITY AND INTELLIGENCE LEADERSHIP PROGRAM

Canada and its domestic and international partners face a complex array of challenges in the security and intelligence domains. Strong personal, organizational and strategic leadership will be needed in the coming years to ensure Canada is prepared for these challenges, and able to make the right assessment on priority needs and effective means of meeting them. The Canadian Security and Intelligence Leadership Program is designed to enhance the skills of those who will be providing leadership in the next ten to fifteen years. This program is one-of-a-kind, designed to address an identified gap in learning opportunities for the policy community, with our unique cross-disciplinary approach, integrating personal leadership development with an advanced and applied exploration of domestic and global policy issues. Graduates of this program will form a stronger network of policy leaders that can address the complex issues facing modern governments.

The CSILP uses dialogue with guests, community members, thought leaders, home organization teams, and faculty to move participant learning beyond theory and into practice. While maintaining those elements alumni considered central to making their CSILP a unique and powerful learning experience, the virtual program design integrates even greater application to the workplace with the introduction of executive coaching, senior leader job shadowing, action learning, and a workplace-based team innovation project.

This program will be delivered virtually over 14 weeks with synchronous learning activities and independent study. The full schedule is available on the next page.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

This program is designed for promising executives (EX minus 1, EX-1, and EX-2 or equivalent) in departments and agencies with a security and intelligence mandate. All participants will be asked to participate in a phone interview to ensure the program meets their learning and development needs.

WHAT YOU WILL LEARN

- How a leader's emotional intelligence can impact leading groups and teams;
- How to provide strategic advice to decision-makers;
- How enduring issues in security and intelligence may unfold in the future;
- How experienced S&I leaders deal with current and anticipated challenges;
- How bias and power can impact S&I policies and operations;
- How to use internal and external partnerships to share information across organizational boundaries;
- How to integrate innovation into public sector leadership and management practices;
- How to support internal and external stakeholders through change initiatives;
- How to support enterprise-wide security and risk management initiatives; and
- How to understand the leadership challenges of the changing cyber world.
